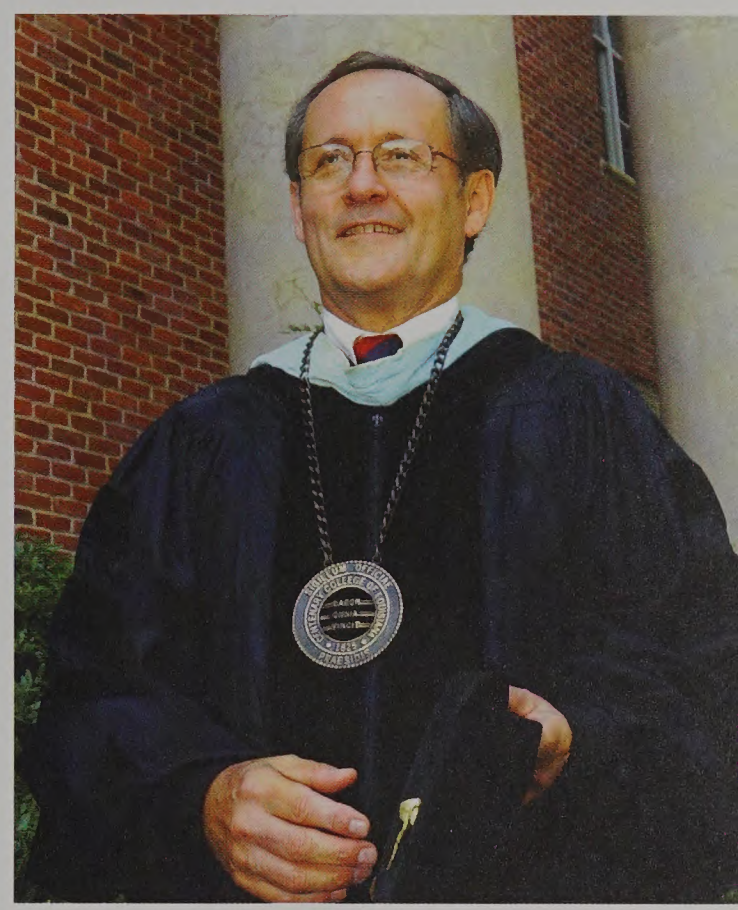
ANNUAL REPORT FROM THE PRESIDENT

HONOR ROLL OF DONORS | 2006-07

The Centenary Community, The Centenary Experience



The faces and stories featured in this year's Annual Report make Centenary a real community. Together, we explore ideas, invent solutions, and make connections with the world around us. Every day, we grow into better leaders.

This year, Centenary College has stood fast in our traditions even as we have moved forward with innovation and strength. We have said goodbye to dear faculty and friends as we have welcomed new students and alumni. We have pursued excellent scholarship and we have served others. This year, we were named to the President's Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll, recognizing outstanding community service and building a culture of service and civic engagement.

Centenary College was pleased to receive national media attention this year. Princeton Review's Annual College Guide The Best 361 Colleges featured us in their 2007 edition and U. S. News & World Report again selected us among the Best-Value Master's Universities in the South. Our theatre students swept the SB Magazine theatrical awards, and our student-athletes and coaches received numerous Summit League Conference honors, including academic sportsmanship awards.

Meanwhile, our own campus has hosted numerous visitors that have brought the world to us: religious scholars, musicians, philosophers, scientists, writers, actors, public activists, physicians, visual artists. Just to mention a few.

Our Annual Report celebrates the Centenary of 2006-2007, but more importantly, it also demonstrates what promise we have for the future.

Thank you for supporting our community. Thank you for joining us on this great journey of education and leadership. Thank you for being a part of Centenary.

Kenneth L. Schwab
President

Centenary Creates and Builds

Jay Reynolds '76 and Dr. Webb Pomeroy started Centenary's student-run radio station KSCL 91.3 FM in 1976 with some salvaged equipment, carpet soundproofing on the walls, and an upstart budget of $700. On a clear day, you could find the signal five miles away from campus.

Thirty years later, an exciting major upgrade has expanded KSCL's 150 watts to 2,100 watts, so that Centenary student Disc Jockeys can now reach the entire Shreveport-Bossier metropolitan area, a potential half-million listeners.

According to faculty advisor Michael Laffey, the upgrade changed how DJs think about their shows. "It went from being a kind of hobby, not very different from sitting in their dorm rooms playing CDs for their pals, to where they must consider how they're communicating to a potential audience of the entire area, Laffey said. "It has had an invigorating effect on how they approach what they do."

> "The upgrade is an opportunity for a conversation that the larger community can share in."
> MICHAEL LAFFEY, KSCL FACULTY ADVISOR

Student music shows are the station's mainstay, and the upgrade means KSCL has expanded its offerings. Athletics began broadcasting basketball games again last year, and a new satellite dish installed on the Student Union Building allows the station to capture programming from Public Radio International (PRI). New hardware and software also enable Centenary students to create and distribute their own programming.

Centenary students started a program called "Just So You Know" last fall. The first show featured biology professor Beth Leuck talking about how Youree Drive construction was affecting an important natural laboratory for her. For now, programs like these are challenging to produce, but the community advisory board continues to provide funding and guidance. A recent grant from the Ethics and Excellence in Journalism Foundation will enhance the studio and buy production equipment for community-service programming like "Just so You Know."

KSCL maintains its strong tradition of playing underrepresented voices in music, and DJs have begun offering a wide variety of programming at all hours. Students remain in charge of programming decisions and daily operations, the recent changes simply make more opportunities available to them.

KSCL is truly realizing its mission statement—a non-commercial radio station where students and faculty collaborate in learning,—KSCL extends Centenary's liberal arts education to our larger community. The radio station helps Centenary students connect with others and explore their social responsibilities. "The upgrade is an opportunity for a conversation that the larger community can share in," said Laffey.

Student DJs experience that conversation personally with individual audience members, not with an abstract community. "Radio establishes an intimate connection between a DJ and a listener," said Jon Schleuss, KSCL station manager. "You get a sense that you're doing the show for one person, not 350,000 potential listeners."

All the while, KSCL improvements continue. Student DJs would like to provide a number of wonderful PRI programs to the Shreveport-Bossier community. In order to do this, they need increased funding. If you would like to help the students in this effort and add your name to our list of visionary donors, please contact the Office of Development at 318.869.5106 or give online at www.centenary.edu/give.

For more information about KSCL, including the current schedule, visit the station website at kscl.fm. Also check out original shows available as podcasts on iTunes. And when you're in the neighborhood, join the conversation at 91.3 FM!

Centenary Achieves National Accreditations

Last year we spilled a lot of ink as two Centenary programs applied for national accreditation. Our Meadows Museum of Art was reaccredited by the American Association of Museums, the highest national recognition a museum can achieve. And our Department of Education received accreditation from the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education.

> Accreditation encourages faculty and staff to personally connect with people across college and community.
> DR. KAREN SOUL, ASSISTANT PROFESSOR > DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

National accreditation recognizes high achievements in disciplinary scholarship and community outreach, creating opportunities to partner with other institutions for more research and service.

"Accreditation means rules for how you exhibit," said Diane Dufilho, Director of the Meadows Museum of Art. "Accreditation is focused on education—using objects to teach rather than make profit. The first question a museum curator asks before borrowing art from another collection is 'Are you accredited?' because that tells something about the breadth of the collection and the level of preservation. Accredited museums have the best collections and best-kept collections."

Centenary's accreditations are all the more remarkable because of the playing field; in both cases, this process puts the College in direct comparison to much larger institutions. "We must maintain a museum at the same level as larger museums like those in Washington, but just smaller… and with more freedom, which makes it more fun, and lets us do exhibits relevant to our community," added Dufilho.

Dr. Karen Soul, NCATE Coordinator and Assistant Professor of Education at Centenary, noted that most universities and colleges that seek national accreditation with NCATE are much larger than Centenary, with usually about 20-30 faculty in the Department of Education working toward accreditation alone. One faculty member with a minimal reduction in classes carried the load for organizing our accreditation bid, which began in 2000, and the entire campus community banded together to support the effort, providing a plethora of statistics and stories to convey what it means to become a dedicated educator at Centenary.

Staff at an accredited museum as small as Meadows also wears many different hats, from curation to grant-writing, from collection management to gift shop management. The museum also remains committed to exhibits relevant to our community, and the permanent collection reflects that regional focus. "The staff considers themselves stewards of the cultural legacy here," said Dufilho, "so they focus on collecting Louisiana artists." And that includes fundraising: the Museum endowment covers some salaries but not all. Grants and donations must cover exhibitions and programs while also enabling the museum to stay free for visitors.

Meadows does educational programming on-campus and in our community. Top-notch gallery guides instruct visitors about the exhibits, guest speakers provide special lectures and help our students create connections in the larger art world, internships launch students into museum careers, and community service opportunities celebrate the arts in our local neighborhood. In fall 2007, the museum's educator is teaching a community arts course to connect Centenary students with Highland Restoration Association in Shreveport, creating a spirit house with students at Creswell Elementary.

The Department of Education has begun to evaluate and strengthen relationships with the three local public schools where Centenary education majors work as student teachers and observe professional educators. The process of accreditation creates an opportunity for considering and pursuing new avenues for community outreach.

"Accreditation encourages faculty and staff to personally connect with people across college and community," said Soul.

And these nationally recognized stamps of excellence prove just how distinct and special Centenary is.

Centenary Brings Real Life to the Classroom

Dr. Amy Hammond helps psychology students in her Human Growth and Development courses connect with the Centenary community.

The course explores the human lifespan, from tiny infants to wizened senior citizens. Students explore how physical, social and cognitive development interact to produce who we are.

The class hosts new mothers and their babies early each semester, with elders invited toward the end of the semester. These guests make learning more active as students connect with real people. The moms talk about their individual pregnancy experiences, and students can observe the distinctions between babies of different ages. This visit always happens after the class has studied pregnancy as well as in utero and infant development.

For the elders visit, octogenarians from the area meet with the students in small groups. Sometimes they might be Centenary alumni who grew up around campus and share fascinating stories about the College. One such visitor knew the entire history of the Centenary Square building. Students also meet sorority sisters, fellow athletes, and the like.

Dr. Hammond invites these visitors to bring to life in a personal way the material the students read about in their textbooks. After each visit, students write a short reflection about the relationship between what they have read and what actually seems to happen in real life. The visitors tell their unique stories and sometimes contradict the books, so these experiences create opportunities for students to explore the intersection between theory and reality, experimentation and anecdote.

Students across the campus take advantage of this distinct learning opportunity—nearly 100 students take the class every year, and most of them are not psychology majors. They are students exploring the social sciences as part of the core curriculum inherent to a liberal arts education. Many of them make connections beyond the classroom as well. Students use these visits to build networks with community members and Centenary alumni without even leaving the classroom.

You can be a part of this Centenary Experience. If you or someone you know would like to participate as a visitor to Human Growth and Development in future semesters, please contact Dr. Amy Hammond, Assistant Professor of Psychology, at ahammond@centenary.edu or 318.841.7267.

Centenary students and faculty Explore India

Did you ever...

Walk in daytime temperatures up to 117 degrees Fahrenheit?

Eat mangoes the "Delhi" way: bite off the tip and suck on the hole while massaging the fruit with both hands, working the core toward your mouth?

Help treat Tibetan lepers?

Hike to the snow line in the Himalayans and stay overnight in a cabin without heat or electricity?

Give your wristwatch to a nun who lives in isolation, a nun who cooked for you and invited you to share her meditative rituals, a nun who speaks no English?

Travel overnight by train to scrub floors or just to hold someone's hand at Mother Teresa's House for the destitute and dying?

Dr. Dorjee (front row, center), internationally renounced scholar in Tibetan Medicine, met with several Centenary students to discuss his work and research. Pictured are (front, seated, l to r) Neil Guidry, Adjunct Instructor in Religious Studies at Centenary; Dr. Dorjee; Karma Rimpoche, translator and guide; (middle row, l to r) Maeghan Davis, Karen Massey, Andrew Roach, Stephanie Johnston, Weston Schild; (back row, l to r) Leia Lewis, Stephen Scarlatto, Alex Boudreaux, Matt Nodurfth, Elizabeth Newtown and Dr. David Otto.

Dr. David Otto, Professor of Religious Studies, took his third group of students this summer to India for May Module, an essential component of the Centenary Experience that gives students brief and yet in-depth exposure to topics not typically experienced in a normal semester class. Modules usually offer credits for intercultural experience or service-learning. This module offered both as students spent three weeks observing at least four religions in five Indian cities.

Why India? According to Dr. Otto, it's a Petri dish for religious studies—home to Hinduism, Sikhism, Islam, Jainism, and Buddhism. Students learn about the world's religious traditions through reading and conducting research. This experience allows them to grasp the significance of the culture as they meet and visit practitioners in their own countries.

"I wanted to provide Centenary students an opportunity to learn of India's religions and cultures first-hand while, at the same time, pushing them out of their comfort zone and encouraging them to assess their own cultural and religious values," said Dr. Otto.

So he created a personal journey unique for Centenary students. Preparations included reading textbooks and beginning e-mail correspondence with Tibetan monks and nuns they will meet on the trip. Dr. Otto hopes to make "Centenary students realize what it feels like to be an outsider, a visitor to a place where all the social norms are different." The in-country experience delivers exactly that.

In fact, Tim Nicholson '07 said the trip inspired him to plan return trips to Asia. He chose the module because he was fascinated with Eastern culture, but now he hopes to visit Thailand and Indonesia sometime in the future. "Memories of this trip are still fresh in my mind," he said.

New adventures are already in the making. Summer 2008 will see the fourth Centenary module to India, where more students will explore her people and places. For many, this may be the first time they will be the outsiders. Cows, beggars, venders, and rickshaws will rule the roads; no social norm will seem normal.

Centenary Connects with Social Justice

Responding with hope and helping hands, Centenary students have connected with troubled communities around them. Jennifer Bouso '08 is just one of many students spending her time and education to rebuild New Orleans.

Passionate about social justice, Bouso was frustrated by what she perceived as substandard humanitarian efforts made by government agencies to aid those affected by Hurricane Katrina. She felt that it was up to her to be an advocate for human rights and global equality by meeting the victims of the natural disaster where they were, providing for their basic needs and helping them help themselves.

Bouso has often visited the parts of New Orleans most affected by the hurricane, but the first visit has never left her memory. "The hardest thing for me was walking into a young girl's room and finding shoebox upon shoebox full of ruined photographs," Bouso said. "It was something I could not fix or buy back. It was overwhelming. The damage was so vast: so many displaced, the lives lost, everything in ruins."

Service in New Orleans has transformed many lives, and Bouso is no exception. But maybe the most changed are the recipients of this work. One homeowner helped by Centenary's first mission trip to South Louisiana said, "When I remember Hurricane Katrina I will not remember the devastation and the loss, but I will remember the compassionate response of you from Centenary College."

Since the destruction of Hurricane Katrina, Bouso has made an ongoing commitment to hurricane relief work in the New Orleans area. This is no surprise to those who know her: an active leader in her mission-minded church, she has long committed any free time she has to serving people, from the Navajo Nation to New Orleans to Shreveport's Allendale district.

Bouso helped lead recent Centenary mission trips to South Louisiana, which have resulted in a new missions focus for the Christian Leadership Center. The past two summers have found her working full-time in hurricane relief, most recently as a construction intern for the Westbank Station of the United Methodist Church.

This volunteerism has dirtied Bouso's hands and inspired them as well. Her artwork has been featured in the newspaper of the Louisiana conference of the United Methodist Church, Louisiana Now! During her final year at Centenary, she will help lead a new service organization at Centenary called Side-By-Side, designed to help connect students into local and global volunteer opportunities. Upon graduation, Bouso plans to pursue a Masters in Public Health through a program that combines traditional study with Peace Corps service.

Jennifer Bouso invents her own unique educational journey, combining her passion for social justice and service.

Dear Donors

THANK YOU! You made the 2006-2007 year a success: Overall, you contributed $5.76 million. You achieved 99% of the goal for the annual fund and annual scholarships combined, giving $3,819,000. You gave $824,000 of the $1.5 million goal for endowed scholarships but contributed another $765,000 for other endowments, so you added more than $1.5 million to the endowment. You added 11 endowed professorships.

You reached a record-high alumni participation rate of 21%; next year you may surpass the goal of 25%.

I know you well enough to know that you measure the real value of your gifts by the tangible and intangible benefits they bring to our students. Last year, Centenary students received much-needed financial aid. They studied in other countries. They led community service teams. They conducted complex scientific research with their professors. They published books written in French. They graduated well prepared for their next steps.

Your gifts continue to make a wonderful difference in the lives of promising young students.

Gratefully,

Katherine Fell
